Among all the regional variations, Delhi Satta King holds a particularly prominent position in this transformation. But how did this happen? What were the origins? What are the current trends? And where is it all heading?

In this blog, we take a deep dive into the history, growth, and current status of the satta king phenomenon in Delhi, while also exploring the role of modern platforms like Satta King 786 in reshaping the game.

What is Satta King?

Before diving into the Delhi-specific story, it's important to understand what satta king is.

Satta King is essentially a number-based lottery game. A player chooses a number between 00 and 99, places a bet, and if the result matches, they win a large multiple of their investment — usually 90 times the bet.

Although illegal in most parts of India, satta continues to thrive in various forms — both offline and online. Names like Gali, Desawar, Faridabad, Ghaziabad, and Delhi are all variants of the game played in different regions.

The Roots of Satta in Delhi

Early Beginnings

The roots of satta in Delhi go back to the 1960s when the game arrived from Mumbai, where it was first introduced in the form of betting on the rates of cotton. That original version was called Ankada Jugar, which later evolved into what we now call satta king.

Delhi quickly became one of the major hubs, thanks to its large urban population, fast-moving economy, and deep connections to North Indian culture.

Rise of Delhi Satta King

Over time, local variations like:

Delhi Bazar

Gali

became the pillars of the Delhi satta scene. Bookies (known as Khaiwals) would collect bets in person, often in secret locations across old Delhi neighborhoods.

By the late 1980s and 1990s, Delhi satta king had turned into a multi-crore underground economy with players from all walks of life — from laborers to businessmen.
