Court Marriage in Delhi

Court marriage in Delhi allows individuals from different religions, castes, or communities to marry legally without traditional rituals. The couple must give a 30-day notice to the marriage registrar of the district where either party has resided for at least 30 days. After verification, the marriage is solemnized in the presence of a marriage officer and three witnesses.

The required documents usually include proof of age, residence, photographs, identity documents, and, if applicable, divorce decree or death certificate of the former spouse. Once all formalities are complete, the couple receives a court marriage certificate, which is a valid proof of marriage in India.

Court Marriage Fees in Delhi

One of the most common concerns is about the Court Marriage Fees in Delhi. The government charges a nominal registration fee, which may vary depending on the jurisdiction. Apart from the government charges, couples may also incur professional fees if they hire a court marriage lawyer in Delhi to assist with paperwork, verification, and legal representation. Considering the complexities of legal documentation, having expert assistance often ensures there are no delays or errors in the process.
